examines contemporary commercial relationships between investors and their intermediaries relationships based on accounts that hold intangible rights to securities funds and commodity contracts such accounts have replaced the traditional physical possession and delivery of tangible objects such as security certificates coins and commodities that were previously used in commercial relationships the author identifies and explains the critical components and functions of the systems for the holding of rights in accounts with intermediaries identifying underlying principles that should be embodied in modern legislation underpinning the law of accounts he not only compares the three major account based systems but does so from a comparative law perspective he looks particularly at the differences between developed economies which have established efficiently functioning accounts based systems and the majority of developing economies which have yet to implement or modernize their
