In chemistry a solution is a special type of homogeneous mixture composed of two or more substances in such a mixture a solute is a substance dissolved in another substance known as a solvent. The solvent is the substance that is in a large amount in the solution and the solute is the substance that is in smaller amounts in a solution.

The most familiar solutions are aqueous solutions in which water is the solvent. For example, in a solution of the sugar glucose in water, glucose molecules are the solute and water molecules are the solvent. In beer, which is typically 2–4% ethanol, ethanol is the primary solute and water is the solvent.

Introduction to acids and bases: introduction to pH. Prepare to mix it up in this unit on solutions: acids and bases. After differentiating between types of mixtures, we'll dive into solutions, learning about solvation and solubility. Then we'll learn about acids and bases, both corrosive and caustic.

Solutions play a very important role in many biological, laboratory, and industrial applications of chemistry. Of particular importance are solutions involving substances dissolved in water.

A solution in chemistry is a homogeneous mixture of two or more substances in relative amounts that can be varied continuously up to what is called the limit of solubility. The term solution is commonly applied to the liquid state of matter, but solutions of gases and solids are possible.
