the significance of a good leadership culture within their personnel policy unfortunately even top managers with impressive track records are not always aware of their mistakes in management decisions and its consequences on the employee's motivation, commitment and performance. If they were they would act differently. At the same time many companies and managers want to improve their leadership processes and methods and therefore seek external support. In Germany about 84 000 management consultants work in some 13 2000 personnel and management consulting companies. 1 those numbers show that the demand for management and leadership specialists remains high. On top of this approximately 5 000 coaches are hired to work exclusively with managers in this process. Science as well as practice is seeking the essence of good leadership, what it stands for, which foundation it needs and how it is performed. Against this backdrop this paper deals with leadership from a scientific and practical view. Chapter 2 analyzes the philosophy of powerful executives on leadership and afterwards leads through the development of science in the field of leadership. In chapter 3 the focus is exclusively on classical leadership theories. On this basis chapter 4 will illustrate what good leadership is about. In chapter 5 I will apply this to winterkorn.

Is Leadership in the Eye of the Beholder? 2014 human resource management literature argues that intended leadership practices can be perceived very differently by employees and that perceived practices are more likely to be related to performance than intended practices because perceived practices are more closely related to motivation and commitment. Using a sample of 1 621 teachers and 79 Danish high schools this study paper finds that intended and perceived transformational and transactional leadership strategies are only weakly correlated and that only perceived strategies both transformational and transactional are significantly related to objectively measured school performance. Leadership Styles and School Performance 2012-03 academic paper from the year 2020 in the subject leadership and human resource management management styles course research paper language english abstract the drive of this discourse was to analyse school leadership ontogenesis in Namibia. The paper analyses whether the gender of the heads disposes leadership in any way it determines factors to dispose leadership and teacher performance in school. Furthermore it looks at the style of leadership that is implemented in the primary schools. The deficiency of efficacious leadership in school configurations has been a venerable predicament and has prevailed since the state attained political autonomy in 1990. The rapid preponderance of high schools across the state since independence exacerbated the predicament with a plethora of these schools. Despite diverse attempts to titivate the quality of education delivery in schools it should be stressed that the interpretivist theoretical perspective was adopted in this study. This viewpoint implies that the emphasis is on crafting communicated concepts and is an approach that purposefully tries to unpack the reality of the situation within a specific contextual environment. The researcher argues that training of leadership results in effective performance. The findings of this research show that fifty three per cent of the school leaders were not trained on the leadership enhancement programme while forty seven per cent of the school leaders were trained. It is recommended that most of the school leaders be trained in the leadership development. The state needs to follow best practises in leadership ontogenesis such as practiced in Singapore, the United Kingdom, New Zealand and Austria. The school leadership furnishes a significant gathering of plethoric models for present school leadership ethos.
